

How to use Add-on Activities

Research Ethics for All offers optional add-on activities for teams who are working together on a research study. Project leaders can use these additional educational materials to provide opportunities to apply educational content to a research study.

These include:

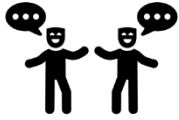

1. Discussion questions about your research study and team:

Sometimes these questions will ask about your team's research materials.

- 2. Rights and Responsibilities Agreement: Use the Add-On Activity Workbook to brainstorm and draft the information that you will put in the Rights and Responsibilities Agreement. The agreement can serve as a one-stop reference for how your team will apply ethical principles to a specific research study. Project Leaders can work with their teams to complete this agreement.

To complete the Rights and Responsibilities Agreement, your team will have discussions. For a few decisions, you might want to use a different resource—the Equipped to Engage Toolkit. The Equipped to Engage Toolkit provides free disability-accessible tools that teams can use to work together to make decisions about planning, doing, and sharing research. You can then document your decisions on the Rights and Responsibilities Agreement.

3. Role Plays: Role Plays provide opportunities for your team to put ideas into practice. You may want to consider selecting Role Plays based on the responsibilities of community researchers in your study.

The add-on Discussion Questions and Learning Activities are linked to learning units and can be used alongside each learning unit or following the full Research Ethics for All training, as a bridge to the research

Rights and Responsibilities (page)	Equipped to Engage Tool Name and Link
Research question (X)	Developing a Research Question
Eligibility criteria (X)	Research Participant Eligibility Criteria
Authorship (X)	Authorship Agreement Template across dissemination products
	Product Specific Authorship Agreement Template protocol-specific training you also provide to each team member.